Foreword

The biographical sketches in this volume are of those citizens of Minnesota who have been of service and have contributed in an outstanding degree to the advancement of the welfare of the communities, counties or state of Minnesota.

Who's Who in Minnesota is a recognition of service to mankind, and not of financial prominence, unless accompanied by consideration of an obligation to humanity.

Over 500 qualified persons of recognized integrity throughout the state of Minnesota have acted as selectors in determining which persons' biographical data should be included. The selectors were asked to consider standards of good citizenship and community service primarily, as the basis for selection.

There is no such thing as a perfect Who's Who. No man is judged alike by any three of his fellowmen, but I believe the selections for inclusion made by the selectors throughout the state should be appreciated and respected.

A sincere effort has been made to obtain biographies of all individuals nominated for Who's Who. It should be emphasized, however, that inclusion is on a purely voluntary basis. There were some who were selected for inclusion who did not care to submit their biographical data.

The biographical sketches of those persons who were not able, or did not care to subscribe financially to this work, were given the same consideration biographically as was given to those who made this work possible. Photographical inclusion in this work does not indicate a greater degree of prominence.

Every effort has been made to include all those deemed eligible, but it must be admitted that some omissions and errors will necessarily occur in a publication of this kind. Such errors and omissions will be corrected in future editions. It is inevitable that even a few days can change the status of the data included in this work, but the information presented is fundamentally correct.

The preparation of the biographical sketches for the Centennial Edition of Who's Who in Minnesota has been a monumental task, but I believe that the reference and historical value of this work will justify the unselfish efforts of the hundreds of selectors, and the thousands of hours consumed in research and compilation.

The first section of this volume contains a brief history of the state of Minnesota, written by Russell Fridley, director of the Minnesota Historical Society.

All photographs in this section, courtesy of the Minnesota Historical Society.

The second section contains the biographical sketches placed in alphabetical order within the county of legal residence. The county sections are also alphabetized.

A key to abbreviations and the alphabetical index will be found in the back of the book.

Photographs of individuals are placed immediately above or within the content of the biographical sketches.

A Sketch of Minnesota

By Russell W. Fridley
Director, Minnesota Historical Society

Although only one hundred years have elapsed since Minnesota became a state in 1858, its citizens can look back on a long and rich history. Its story reaches back in time to the ice ages, to the great glaciers that once covered most of the area. These moving rivers of ice are largely responsible for Minnesota's varied and beautiful landscape. Their record is written in the more than eleven thousand lakes left in their wake; in the forests, the rolling prairies, fertile valleys, high bluffs, rocky shores, and rounded knolls that give variety to Minnesota's scenery, and in the deep, rich soil that is the basis of its agriculture. Over the greater part of the state, the glaciers deposited a dark brown or black sandy loam of great fertility, adapted to cereal crops. In the east-central portion, the soil is sandy, excellent for hay and root crops.

Glacial action is responsible, too, for an extensive height of land in north-central Minnesota which determines the courses of three great continental river systems whose waters flow from this height northward to Hudson Bay, eastward to the Atlantic Ocean, and southward to the Gulf of Mexico. In Minnesota, the Red River of the North, the Lake Superior-St. Lawrence, and the Mississippi River systems have their beginnings. These waterways have played a significant role in the state's development.

Southern Minnesota was originally open, rolling prairie interspersed with groves of oak and other deciduous trees. A region known as the "Big Woods", composed of broad-leaved hardwood trees, extended up the Minnesota River Valley to the big bend. Northern Minnesota, except for the Red River Valley, was once covered by a dense coniferous forest, made up largely of white, Norway, and jack pine, but containing also some birch, poplar, maple, and oak. In the south, the lakes, which occupy glacial moraines for the most part, are generally broad and shallow, while those in the north, formed by glacial basins scoured in solid rock, are generally deep, with rugged, rocky, pine-covered shores.

An extinct lake is responsible for the flat, fertile plains of the Red River Valley. Known as Glacial Lake Agassiz, it is one of the most interesting features of the glacial epoch. Receding ice of the later glacial period formed Lake Agassiz in the area now occupied by the Red River Valley of Minnesota, North Dakota, and Manitoba. As the glacier retreated, the lake waters drained northward leaving the flat landscape we know today. Upper and Lower Red Lakes are the only remaining remnants of this once huge body of water.

Two important human skeletons, discovered in Minnesota in recent decades, indicate a long period of human occupation in the region. Minnesota Man, estimated to be ten thousand years old, and Brown's Valley Man, estimated at eight thousand years, as well as numerous mounds throughout the state shed light on the area's prehistoric period.

When the French explorer Du Luth, the first white man definitely known to have trod the soil of Minnesota, visited the region in 1679, he found it occupied by the Sioux, or Dakota, Indians, who were living in a stone-age culture. These red men then lived in three great villages on Mille Lacs Lake, of which Izatys, or Kathio, was the largest.

A century later, about 1750, the Chippewa were forced westward along the St. Lawrence River Valley by conquering tribes of Iroquois. Armed with the knives, guns, and ammunition of the white man, the Chippewa, in turn, forced the Sioux to retreat to the west and south. When British and American fur traders reached the headwaters of the Mississippi after the close of the French regime in 1763, the Chippewa were living in the former lands of the Sioux. The latter had become a prairie tribe with a bitter hatred for their Chippewa aggressors.

Du Luth was in the vanguard of French, English, and American explorers who found their way into the Minnesota country at surprisingly early dates through the innumerable waterways left as glacial imprints. By the three water highways that lead into the heart of Minnesota — the Red, the St. Louis, and the Mississippi rivers — came traders in their light birch canoes, lured by the treasures of furs that brought fortunes in distant European and Asiatic markets; explorers to seek the elusive Northwest Passage to the Orient or to set up claims to an inland empire; missionaries to convert the Indians to Christianity; and settlers who were to build the foundations of a commonwealth. These waterways not only have influenced the course of Minnesota's history, but one of them, the Minnesota (a Sioux name probably meaning "cloud-tinted water") gave the state its name.

Scarcely were the Pilgrim fathers settled on their rocky shore at Plymouth when the exploration of the Minnesota region began. Jean Nicolet, a Frenchman, ventured as far west as Green Bay in 1635 and spent the winter there. He took back to Montreal the first known information about the Indians that inhabited the Minnesota country. It may never be known who, if anyone, preceded Du Luth into the area, but two Frenchmen, Radisson and Groseilliers, seem to have been the first to leave records of trips that at least approached the future boundaries of the state. Radisson's narrative of his voyages into the Lake Superior country not long after the middle of the seventeenth century records vividly the life of the native tribes at the beginning of their contacts with the white men, before the clashes between the Sioux and Chippewa that pushed the former out of the Lake Superior area.

Best known among the many Frenchmen who made their way into the Northwest after the visits of Radisson and Groseilliers were Father Claude Allouez, a Jesuit priest who explored the northern and western shores of Lake Superior in the late 1660s; Nicolas Perrot, who in 1686 built a fort on the shores of Lake Pepin and took possession of the region in the name of the king of France; Du Luth, who between 1679 and 1689 explored the country between the Kaministiquia, the Mississippi, and the St. Croix rivers and exercised a wise restraint over the savage tribes of the region; Michael Accault and Father Louis Hennepin, who on La Salle's orders traveled to the upper Mississippi in 1680, when Hennepin discovered and named the Falls of St. Anthony; Pierre Charles le Sueur, a companion of Perrot at Lake Pepin in 1686, who built a post on Prairie Island in 1695 and Fort L'Huillier at the mouth of the Blue Earth River in 1700; Sieur de La Perrière and a party of Frenchmen who established Fort Beauharnois on the west shore of Lake Pepin in 1727 near the present site of Frontenac and built the first Christian mission on Minnesota soil; and the knightly La Vèrendrye, who with his sons and nephew, La Jemeraye, opened the great canoe route from Lake Superior to Lake Winnipeg between 1731 and 1743. Fort St. Charles on the Northwest Angle, built by La Vèrendrye and his men in 1732, served as his headquarters for almost a decade. Its site remains a major point of historical interest in Minnesota and the Northwest.

Peace between Great Britain and France at the close of the French and Indian War in 1763 brought eastern Minnesota under the British flag. It also brought about freer trade with the Indians, and as a result many fur traders built their palisaded forts on Minnesota's rivers and lakes. In 1768 the site of Grand Portage was cleared for the construction of a fur post which, for the next fifty years, was to be the great inland center of the North West Company's trade.

Five interesting figures of the British regime in the Minnesota country were Jonathan Carver, Peter Pond, Jean Baptiste Perrault and Jean Baptiste Cadotte and David Thompson. Carver spent the winter of 1766-67 among the Sioux a short distance up the Minnesota River. He was serving as map maker and advance man on an expedition, inspired by Major Robert Rogers, commandant at Fort Mackinac, to cross the continent in quest of the Northwest Passage. The plan had to be given up, but Carver later wrote and published an account of his travels which became a "best seller" of its day and gave to thousands on both sides of the Atlantic their first information about the Minnesota country.

Pond, a Connecticut Yankee, spent two successive winters as a fur trader on the Minnesota River, beginning in 1773. Other traders operating in Minnesota during the British period were Jean Baptiste Perrault, who from 1783 to 1800 was an almost constant sojourner in this promised land of furs; and Jean Baptiste Cadotte, who is believed to have opened to British traders the contested territory between the Sioux and the Chippewa in central and western Minnesota. Through northern Minnesota from the Red River to Lake Superior in the winter of 1797-98 passed David Thompson, a trader for the North West Company, who was also employed in determining the location of the northern boundary along the forty-ninth parallel. His extensive travels for the combined purpose of trade and exploration resulted in a great map of northwestern North America, and the diaries in which he recorded his observations contain the earliest scientific data known to be extant on Minnesota topography.

Twenty years after the British gained control of eastern Minnesota, they lost it to the United States in the treaty that ended the Revolutionary War. Although the peace of 1783 ceded to the young American nation the region between the Mississippi River and Lake Superior, British traders continued to ply their trade and maintain their forts in the area until after the War of 1812, when Congress passed an act prohibiting foreigners from serving as supervisors in the fur trade on American soil. After 1816 the North West Company and its famous inland depot — Grand Portage — passed from the Minnesota scene, and the American Fur Company, which had been incorporated by John Jacob Astor in 1808, took up the business of exploiting Minnesota's fur resources.

In 1805 the United States War Department sent Lieutenant Zebulon M. Pike and a detachment of troops to explore the upper Mississippi Valley. He was to seek the source of the Mississippi, gather information on the Indians, make peace between the Sioux and Chippewa, win their friendship for the United States, and select sites for future military posts. Pike failed to find the Mississippi's source, but he ably carried out his other assignments and raised the American flag over the Minnesota country for the first time.

To protect American traders and to establish American control over the upper Mississippi Valley, a military post was planned at the confluence of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers after the close of the War of 1812. The land on which this fort was built had been secured from the Sioux by Pike in 1805. In 1819, Lieutenant Colonel Henry Leavenworth led a detachment of soldiers up the Mississippi from Prairie du Chien to build the projected fortress. They set up camp near what is now the village of Mendota. After a difficult winter during which many men died, the encampment was moved farther up the river to Camp Coldwater, so named for a near-by spring. Colonel Josiah Snelling succeeded Leavenworth as commandant in 1820 and directed the building of the permanent fort on the bluff overlooking the junction of the two rivers. It was first called Fort St. Anthony but was renamed for Snelling in 1825.

With the establishment of Fort Snelling a new era began for the Minnesota country. The erection and garrisoning of the post effectively extended American authority for the first time over the region, paved the way for white settlement, and set in motion the transformation of a vast Indian territory into an American state. As a military outpost on the remote American frontier, Fort Snelling served as the nucleus from which stemmed the settlement of Minnesota and much of the Northwest. Established while the region was still an unsettled wilderness, the fort served the nation in various roles for a hundred and twenty-six years. It was discontinued as an active military post on October 14, 1946, but it remains a historic site of major importance in the development of Minnesota.

From this outpost trade relations were opened in the 1820s with the Selkirk colony on the lower Red River in Canada; and to it went the first steamboat on the upper Mississippi in 1823, inaugurating communication with the settlements to the south and east. Fort Snelling also served as the point of departure for many expeditions. Among the explorers who stopped at the hospitable post were Lewis Cass, who attempted to find the source of the Mississippi in 1820; Giacomo C. Beltrami, an Italian adventurer, who three years later sought the same objective; Major Stephen H. Long, whose second Minnesota journey in 1823 took him up the Minnesota and down the Red River; Henry R. Schoolcraft, who discovered Lake Itasca, the source of the Mississippi, in 1832; George Catlin, whose journey of 1836 took him to the famous pipestone quarry; Joseph N. Nicollet, whose travels in the late 1830s resulted in the first scientifically accurate map of the present area of Minnesota; and Major Samuel Woods, who marched with dragoons through the Red River country in 1849.

Major Lawrence Taliaferro, who was assigned to Fort Snelling as Indian agent, arrived soon after the troops in 1819. During the next two decades, he exercised a wise influence over the Indians under his charge, laboring on the whole successfully to keep peace between the Sioux and Chippewa. In spite of his efforts, however, the old rivalry between the tribes broke into open warfare several times between 1835 and 1845. One severe encounter took place in 1842 when a band of Chippewa attacked the Sioux village of Kaposia near present-day South St. Paul. On May 27, 1858, a sharp fight between the Mille Lacs Chippewa and Shakopee's band of Sioux took place northeast of Shakopee. Occuring sixteen days after Minnesota became a state, this was the last important battle between Minnesota's two great Indian tribes.

Just at the time of the founding of Fort Snelling, missionaries began to appear among the Sioux and Chippewa Indians. The Catholics, Sévère Dumoulin and William Edge, were at Rainy Lake and Pembina as early as 1818. They were followed in 1829 by the Presbyterians, Alvin Coe and Jedediah Stevens, and in 1831 and 1833 by the Congregationalists, Frederick Ayer, Edmund F. Ely, and William T. Boutwell. In 1836 two Swiss Protestants, Daniel Gavin and Samuel Dentan, began a mission station at Red Wing's village; and the following year a Methodist elder, Alfred Brunson, opened a station at Kaposia. Other prominent missionaries were Thomas S. Williamson, Stephen R. Riggs, Father Augustin Ravioux, and Gideon and Samuel Pond, who labored among the Sioux; and Father Francis Pierz, who established a church and school at Grand Portage in the early 1840s, and later worked in central Minnesota.

To the missionaries belongs the credit for devising alphabets for the Dakota and Chippewa languages and converting them into writing. Among the Sioux, the Ponds and Williamson were the leaders in this work; for the Chippewa, the Catholic missionaries Fathers Georges A. Belcourt and Friedrich Baraga devised dictionaries, while a Protestant, Frederick Ayer, compiled a spelling book.

To the Fort Snelling area in 1834 came another man destined to play a major part in the development of Minnesota — Henry H. Sibley, fur trader, territorial delegate to Congress, and first governor of the state. As a young man, Sibley was appointed to manage the affairs of the American Fur Company in the upper Mississippi Valley. During the first years of his residence in the Minnesota country, the fur trade was a big business, but after 1837 the depletion of fur-bearing animals and the encroaching fingers of settlement caused the trade to decline. In 1842 the reign of the American Fur Company ended when it went into bankruptcy.

Meanwhile, however, Sibley had moved to exploit the trade in the more remote regions by sending Norman Kittson to operate a trading post at Pembina. Kittson conceived the idea of sending furs to the Mendota market in Red River carts drawn by a single ox or pony. Three main routes or trails were used: one led up the Red River and down the Minnesota; a second left the Red River near Breckenridge and followed the valleys of the Sauk and Mississippi to Mendota and St. Paul; the third veered southeastward from Pembina, followed the beaches of glacial Lake Agassiz to the vicinity of Detroit Lakes, then, winding along the valleys of the Leaf and Crow Wing rivers, reached the Mississippi at Crow Wing and joined the Sauk Valley route near St. Cloud. Over these trails traveled caravans of oxcarts bringing furs to Mendota and later to St. Paul and returning to the Red River settlements loaded with flour and other supplies.

Settlers began to collect about Fort Snelling soon after its establishment, squatting on the government lands around the post. Many of these people were old voyageurs or colonists who had moved south from the Red River settlements. In 1840 these squatters were ordered off the military reservation — an act that hastened the settlement of St. Paul, for many of them moved a short distance up the river to cluster around the little log church built by the Reverend Lucian Galtier, a Catholic priest.

This chapel Galtier dedicated in 1841 to the great missionary apostle, and from the church the village that sprang up around it took the name St. Paul.

Meanwhile other settlements of whites had begun. In 1837 the United States government had purchased from the Indians the triangle of land between the lower St. Croix and the Mississippi rivers, and at once lumbering camps began to dot the pine forests. Settlements began at Stillwater, Marine, and St. Croix Falls; and in 1848 a land boom started at St. Paul. Within a year immigration had increased the area's population to the number required for a territory; and in 1849 this region, which in whole or in part, had been successively a portion of the French, English, and Spanish empires, the Northwest Territory, and the territories of Louisiana, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Iowa, and Wisconsin, came into the Union as Minnesota Territory. Alexander Ramsey, a Whig from Pennsylvania, was appointed by President Zachary Taylor to be its first governor.

From 1849 to 1858 Minnesota remained a territory. This period witnessed the establishment of counties, the building of roads, the survey and sale of large tracts of public lands, the extensive development of the lumber industry, and, in general, the laying of the foundations of a frontier state. One of the usual prerequisites for such a foundation is land, and until 1851 most of the land in Minnesota still belonged to the Indians. In that year the treaties of Traverse des Sioux and Mendota opened for settlement a large portion of southern and western Minnesota, which had been occupied by the Sioux. In 1854 and 1855 the Chippewa Indians yielded up a large area in the northeastern and north central parts of the territory.

During the territorial period lumbering boomed and built up the towns of Stillwater and St. Anthony, later a part of Minneapolis. St. Paul, at the head of navigation on the Mississippi, became the commercial center of the region as an increasing number of steamers landed at its levee, unloading settlers and goods. In 1851 the growing town became the capital of the territory; the territorial prison was established at Stillwater; and St. Anthony was chosen as the site for a future university.

After 1851 settlement in southeastern Minnesota progressed rapidly, especially along the valleys of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers. The majority of settlers in the years before the Civil War were native Americans, largely New Englanders, New Yorkers, and Pennsylvanians. Many of them came in colonies or townsite parties, and the new hamlets had much of the tone of eastern villages. Education was stressed from the start, both by the territorial legislature, which in its first session evolved a comprehensive system of free public schools and in 1851 passed an act to incorporate the University of Minnesota, and by religious bodies like the Methodists and the Benedictine monks, who in 1854 and 1857, respectively, established Hamline University and St. John's University. Another characteristic of these frontier settlements was the prevalence of lyceums, reading circles, and lecture programs. A high standard was set for journalism by the early newspapers, particularly by the first paper published in the territory, the Minnesota Pioneer, established at St. Paul in 1849 by James M. Goodhue. Through his newspaper Goodhue became one of the most effective promoters of the new territory.

Immigration was stimulated, too, by the territorial government, which appointed a board of immigration, and by transportation agencies. This was the heydey of steamboats on the upper Mississippi, which plied between St. Paul and the down river ports of Galena, Dunleith, or St.

Louis, carrying boatload after boatload of settlers northward. A great desire for railroads was felt and expressed by the citizens of Minnesota Territory, but the panic of 1857 and the Civil War retarded the arrival of the iron horse. Even before the war, however, the immigration of Irish, Germans, Norwegians, Swedes, and other nationalities had begun, and the movement increased for many years.

By 1857 settlement had progressed so far that statehood was in the air. The desire for land grants, which Congress could be expected to make only to states, and the need of representatives in Washington to urge the building of a Pacific railroad through Minnesota led in that year to a demand for statehood. The story of the rival conventions, Democratic and Republican, that met in St. Paul in July, 1857, held separate sessions, and framed two constitutions almost identical in phrasing is a dramatic one. From the beginning the convention was divided into hostile Democratic and Republican camps. So bitter was the feeling that the two groups refused to meet together, and members of one group would not sign the document produced by the other. Two versions — a Republican and a Democratic — were made. Hence, Minnesota is unique in its possession of two slightly different but equally authentic constitutions.

Even more dramatic is the story of how Congress kept Minnesota standing before the portals until "Bleeding Kansas" had been ministered unto, despite all Stephen A. Douglas' efforts in Minnesota's behalf. Finally, on May 11, 1858, after almost a year of waiting, Minnesota took its place among the states. On May 24, Henry H. Sibley, a Democrat, who had defeated Ramsey in a close election the previous fall, was sworn in as the state's first governor.

Minnesota's early politics were characterized by bitter rivalries. The fast-growing Republican party, led by Alexander Ramsey, gained ground rapidly, and in 1859 Ramsey replaced Sibley as governor. His campaign was assisted by articulate spokesmen like Mrs. Jane Grey Swisshelm of St. Cloud who took up the antislavery cause with enthusiasm. In the first presidential election in which Minnesota participated — that of 1860 — Abraham Lincoln polled twenty-two thousand votes and carried the state by a plurality of ten thousand.

By 1860 eastern and southern Minnesota were well settled areas. To the west, Hutchinson, Glencoe, and Litchfield were growing rapidly. On the Minnesota River, New Ulm was a thriving little city guarded by Fort Ridgely, which had been established in 1853. Above the Falls of St. Anthony on the Mississippi, settlement had reached beyond St. Cloud to Little Falls, and, up the valley of the Sauk River, Sauk Centre and Alexandria were stockaded settlements in the wilderness. A few settlers had made their way into the Red River Valley and an isolated settlement had been formed at Duluth on Lake Superior. When the Civil War broke out over the land in 1861, the young state of Minnesota was the first to respond to President Abraham Lincoln's call for troops, and before the conflict ended, the state had supplied more than twenty-two thousand men for the Union army.

While war raged in the South, Minnesotans were called upon to defend their own frontiers against a large Indian uprising which occurred in the state during the summer of 1862. In August of that year the Sioux Indians, feeling that they had been deceived in the treaty of 1851, and goaded by the lack of food, the tardiness of their annual annuity payments, and other causes, rose against the whites and massacred scores of helpless settlers in the Minnesota Valley. Fort Ridgely and New Ulm were beseiged, and significant battles also occurred at Birch Cooley, Fort Abercrombie, Acton, Forest City, Hutchinson and other places. More than three hundred whites lost their lives before forces under General Sibley decisively defeated the Indians, led by Little Crow, at Wood Lake. Three days later two hundred and sixty-nine white captives were released. Thirty-eight of the Sioux taken prisoner were found guilty of gross offenses and were hanged at Mankato. Others fled into Canada and the Dakotas, but expeditions under Sibley and General Alfred Sully marched against them in 1863 and 1864 and drove them beyond the Missouri. Many of the newer settlements were almost depopulated for a time as a result of the uprising. But the hysteria created by the conflict subsided quickly and the development of the state continued.

The coming of peace ushered in a new era of rapid growth. Settlement continued into the early twentieth century. First the southeast and central portions of the state were peopled. When railroads at last became a reality, the south and west and, finally, the northeast and northwest sections of the state were settled. Minnesota's first railroad was completed between St. Paul and St. Anthony in 1862 by the St. Paul and Pacific, the road that was reorganized under the leadership of James J. Hill in 1879 and that eventually became the Great Northern. From the older centers in Minnesota, tracks reached out to the west, north, and south. The Northern Pacific, the first road to connect the state with the Pacific coast, was completed under the guidance of Henry Villard in 1883.

Earlier immigrants had come from the eastern states and from northern Europe. In the later period Minnesota's population was increased by new arrivals from Germany and the Scandinavian countries, and by Poles, Czechs, Slavs, Russians, Italians, Greeks, and other nationalities, who found employment in its forests and mines and on its farms. In the decade from 1870 to 1880, for example, the state's population jumped 77.6 per cent.

During the years following the Civil War, the forest resources of the state were intensively exploited. Minneapolis and Duluth owed their rapid growth in the 1870s and 1880s in part to the milling and shipping of lumber. In 1905, with the depletion of the area's magnificent stands of white pine, production of lumber reached its peak with the cutting of two billion feet of timber. The mid-twentieth century has seen the state's forest industries rise again, with the production of pulpwood, Christmas trees, and other products.

In the last half of the nineteenth century, agriculture in Minnesota emerged from a frontier subsistence type of farming and between 1870 and 1890 developed into commercial farming, devoted largely to a single crop. The state became one of the world's great wheat-producing centers. As the cultivation of wheat expanded between 1860 and 1870, flour mills mushroomed in the southeastern part of the state. The water power at the Falls of St. Anthony made it a logical spot for the location of flour mills. As early as 1854 the Island Mill was grinding flour for the community. In the twenty years from 1870 to 1890 Minneapolis became the flour-milling capital of the world. Edmond N. La Croix, a Frenchman working at Alexander Faribault's mill in Faribault, contributed greatly to this development, for in 1870 he perfected and installed the nation's first middlings purifier in a Minneapolis flour mill. It revolutionized flour milling throughout the United States and abroad, greatly improved the world's bread, and encouraged the agricultural development of Minnesota, the Dakotas, and western Canada.

Other Minnesotans were prominent in advancing agriculture. Among them were William G. Le Duc who stimulated experimentation in growing new crops; Wendelin Grimm who developed the hardiest variety of alfalfa known; Peter Gideon who produced the Wealthy apple; and Theophilus L. Haecker who was an outstanding leader in the farm co-operative movement. Under the leadership of Haecker and Willet Mays, who advocated diversified farming, Minnesota agriculture swung toward a balanced crop program.

Beginning about 1880, wheat gradually began to give way to corn as the staple crop, and by 1890 only the Red River Valley still produced substantial quantities of wheat. Dairying did not become an important industry in Minnesota until the early 1880s, but its development since then has been rapid. Minnesota ranks high among the states in the production of milk, butter, and eggs, and there has been a remarkable growth of marketing through farmers' co-operative creameries.

The post-Civil War period was one of great discontent among the farmers of the state. A Minnesota pioneer, Oliver H. Kelley, who began farming on the lonely frontier near the present town of Elk River, in 1849, founded the first national farm organization, the Patrons of Husbandry, or National Grange, in 1867. The Kelley home served as the organization's first national headquarters. Another Minnesotan who became a national leader in the "agrarian crusade" was Ignatius Donnelly, a colorful and dominant figure in third-party movements during the last four decades of the nineteenth century.

One objective of the farmers' movement was the correction of certain abuses in the grain-marketing practices of railroads and elevators. A number of regulatory laws, usually called "Granger Acts" because they were sponsored by granges, passed the state legislature. Cases arising out of these acts, and carried to the United States Supreme Court, which decided against the railroads, had far-reaching results in establishing principles of public regulation of common carriers. The agrarian crusade from 1870 to 1900 brought about substantial reforms of the currency and credit systems; railroads and trusts were brought under public control; and farmers' cooperatives gained a firm foothold in Minnesota.

A new dimension was added to the state's economic outlook with the discovery of rich beds of iron ore in northeastern Minnesota in the last decades of the nineteenth century. In 1884 the first shipment of ore was made from the Vermilion Range, finding its way to Lake Superior and eastern markets by way of Two Harbors. Later Duluth developed into an important lake port for the shipment of ore from the Mesabi Range, discovered by the Merritt brothers in 1890, and with the opening of the Cuyuna Range in 1911, Minnesota became the source of most of the nation's iron ore, a resource that made possible the rapid development of America's huge steel industry.

Minnesota still leads the nation in the production of iron ore. With the depletion of its high-grade ores in sight, considerable research in recent years has been devoted to the utilization of low-grade ore, or taconite. Recently, a commercially feasible concentration process was developed by E. W. Davis, director of the University of Minnesota Mines Experiment Station. The taconite industry, involving both mining and manufacturing, is now being developed on a commercial scale, and it has given new economic life to northeastern Minnesota. The state's taconite reserves have been conservatively estimated at twenty-four billion tons.

Lumbering, flour milling, and iron mining were major forces which affected Minnesota's economy in the nineteenth century and contributed to its industrial and urban development. But other factors were also involved. The combination of agricultural products and fine transportation facilities led to the growth of South St. Paul, Austin, and Albert Lea as meat-packing centers. The quarries of the St. Cloud area contributed to the growth of the "Granite City". International Falls developed around a by-product of the lumber industry — the manufacture of paper. During the century from 1850 to 1950, Minnesota's population increased from 6,077 to 2,982,483. By the latter year, more than half of the state's people lived in the three large metropolitan areas of Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth.

In the field of transportation the state developed rapidly. The trails that a century ago were traveled by the distinctive Red River oxcarts were transformed into dirt roads, and still later into paved highways. Water and rail transportation continued to play significant roles. Duluth, with its network of iron-ore docks and railroads ranks second only to New York City in annual shipping tonnage. In 1927 a young man from Minnesota named Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., made a pioneering nonstop flight from New York to Paris. This feat opened to the world the possibilities of the air age. Carl Eric Wickman, another Minnesotan, pioneered the development of bus transportation. In 1915 he founded in Hibbing a small taxi service that developed into the extensive Greyhound Bus Lines.

Throughout most of its existence, Minnesota has been predominantly an agricultural state. In the mid-twentieth century, however, its industrialization accelerated. By 1950 the dollar value of its manufactured products exceeded cash farm receipts for the first time in the state's history. Agriculture, however, is still the foundation of the state's economy since many of the area's leading manufactures are food products, grain and feed stuffs, and dairy products. Increasingly, however, other manufacturing industries are assuming more and more importance in the state's economy. Machinery, printing, electronics, chemicals, paper products, fabricated metal materials, and electrical power are among the principal manufactures of the state today.

Also important is its tourist industry. With its beautiful and varied landscape and bracing climate, Minnesota was a vacation land and a health resort before the Civil War. As early as 1840 visitors traveled thousands of miles to take the "Fashionable Tour" by steamboat up the Mississippi to view the Falls of St. Anthony, Minnehaha Falls, and Fort Snelling. In the century that followed, Minnesota's attractions for the tourists and health-seekers continued. Its north country with its vast forests and numerous lakes, in particular, is a haven for the fisherman, hunter, camper, canoeist, and hay-fever sufferer. Although health-seekers no longer stream into the region because of a belief in the curative powers of its climate, they continue to come to enjoy the benefits of its medical facilities. Through the development of the Mayo Clinic at Rochester and the University of Minnesota Hospitals at Minneapolis, the state has become a world medical center.

Cultural and educational development have marked the state's progress. The University of Minnesota opened its doors in 1869 and in the decades that followed sought to meet and serve the changing needs of the state in higher education. Today it ranks as the third largest university in the country. Other institutions of higher education include five state colleges, fourteen private liberal arts colleges, and a dozen professional schools. Public education in Minnesota, with a century of substantial growth behind it, is entering a phase of expansion to meet the mounting demands upon it.

Musical organizations became active in St. Paul as early as the 1860s, and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra can trace its beginnings to a musical society founded in the 1870s. Free libraries appeared in the cities in the 1880s, and the Minneapolis Society of Fine Arts was incorporated in 1883. The Minnesota Historical Society, founded in 1849, is the oldest institution in the state. For over a hundred years, it has been collecting and preserving the rich history of the area.

Throughout its century of existence, Minnesota has produced outstanding figures in many fields. Their leadership is reflected in pioneer planners like Ramsey and Sibley; industrial captains like James J. Hill and Frederick Weyerhaeuser; educational leaders like Edward Duffield Neill, William Watts Folwell, and Maria Sanford; political leaders like Ignatius Donnelly, Knute Nelson, John Lind, John A. Johnson,

A. C. Townley, Frank B. Kellogg, and Floyd B. Olson; cultural leaders like Cass Gilbert, Leroy S. Buffington, O. E. Rolvaag, Sinclair Lewis, F. Scott Fitzgerald, and George E. Vincent; medical and dental pioneers like the Doctors Mayo, Hewitt, and Alfred Owre; crusaders for women's rights like Mrs. Jane Grey Swisshelm; spiritual leaders like Archbishop John Ireland, Bishop Henry Whipple, George Sverdrup, and Eric Norelius.

Four Minnesotans have served in the cabinets of presidents of the United States: Alexander Ramsey as secretary of war for Rutherford B. Hayes; William Windom as secretary of the treasury for James A. Garfield and Benjamin Harrison; Frank B. Kellogg as secretary of state for Calvin Coolidge; and William D. Mitchell as attorney general for Herbert Hoover. Two others have approached cabinet rank – William G. Le Duc, who served as commissioner of agriculture for Hayes, and Harold E. Stassen, who was President Dwight D. Eisenhower's special advisor on disarmament. Two Minnesotans, Pierce Butler and William O. Douglas, have served on the United States Supreme Court. Mrs. Eugenie Anderson of Red Wing, who served as ambassador to Denmark between 1949 and 1953, was the first woman to hold such a post in the nation's history.

Politically, Minnesota has given birth to a number of third parties that have stamped the state's voting habits with great independence. Although the first state officials were Democrats, the Republican party took office in 1860 and remained dominant for a generation after the Civil War. Challenges from the Democrats and from third parties increased toward the end of the century, and in 1898 John Lind, a Democrat, won the governorship. A Republican, Samuel R. Van Sant, then captured the office for two terms until 1905 when John A. Johnson appeared to carry the state three times. From 1909 until 1930 the state offices were held by the Republican party.

The tradition of agrarian revolt led by Kelley and Donnelly in the nineteenth century was perpetuated in Minnesota in the twentieth century by A. C. Townley, a native of Browns Valley, who organized and founded the Nonpartisan League in 1915. For some years it was a strong influence in the politics of the region. Another of its leaders was Charles A. Lindbergh, Sr. The Farmer-Labor party, which grew out of the league, was organized after World War I. It elected Floyd B. Olson governor in 1930. Olson's career was cut short in his third term by death in 1936. Two Farmer-Labor governors succeeded him – Hjalmar Petersen and Elmer Benson.

The Republican party returned to power in the state elections of 1938. Harold E. Stassen, first inaugurated as the state's chief executive in 1939, was twice re-elected. Stassen was succeeded by Edward J. Thye, Luther W. Youngdahl, and C. Elmer Anderson, as the Republicans held the governorship for sixteen years. A merger of the Democratic and the Farmer-Labor parties, effected in 1944, was first successful in electing a governor — Orville L. Freeman — in 1954. Governor Freeman was re-elected in 1956.

In presidential elections, Minnesota supported every Republican candidate between 1860 and 1928, except in 1912 when Woodrow Wilson outpolled William Howard Taft. In the elections of 1932 through 1948 Minnesota was in the Democratic column. In 1952 and 1956, Dwight D. Eisenhower carried the state for the Republicans.

No brief sketch can touch on all the many forces that have operated in the development of Minnesota or call the long roll of its distinguished sons and daughters. The transformation of the area within a century from a rough frontier into a commonwealth with a substantial industrial economy, has been rapid and remarkable. In general, its people have been influenced by and have been a part of the trends that have been fundamental in modern American life. To the national life, too, the state and its people have made notable contributions both in war — Civil, Spanish-American, the two World Wars, and the Korean War — and in the pursuits of peace — statesmanship, the church, science, invention, the arts, humanities, and the professions. From the day of the explorer to the era of the rocket, the state has been intimately bound to the larger world in which its transition from wilderness to commonwealth has had its setting.
